WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA:

A strong high pressure ridge will be over the Eastern Pacific and West Coast through early next week. Afternoon temperatures will be 10-15 degrees above normal through Sunday, and a light northeast/offshore surface wind of 22-25 mph will enhance the warm and dry conditions from the lower western Sierra slopes to the coast. Afternoon relative humidity in those areas may drop as low as 15-20%. The ridge will gradually weaken and move overhead during the middle part of next week, and high clouds will increase as a Pacific frontal system approaches while temperatures trend back toward normal. Light rain is possible in northern areas on Thursday and at this point it appears that the front will move inland with more widespread rain Thursday night into Friday.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA:

A strong ridge of high pressure over California will cause temperatures to remain 10 to 15 degrees above normal through Saturday, with mid 60s to mid 70s in the mountains and 80s to low 90s in the valleys. Minimum humidity will be mainly in the teens through Saturday. The ridge of high pressure will weaken bringing a cooling trend and an increase in humidity to the region Sunday through Tuesday. Temperatures will cool to near normal by Tuesday. The marine layer will reform bringing low clouds and fog back to the coastal areas Sunday night and Monday morning and to most coastal valley locations by Tuesday morning. The ridge will strengthen once again bringing a slow warming and drying trend to the region Wednesday through the end of next week. The ridge for late next week will not be nearly as strong as the current ridge and temperatures are expected to be 5 to 10 degrees above normal at their warmest. Winds will be light offshore through Saturday and then become light onshore Sunday through the end of next week.
